LEADING EDUCATORS HEADLINE STATE MEET

by Thelma V. Taylor

The Lafayette Hotel in Long Beach will be home base for SLAC's annual state meeting, February 11-13, 1961. If the roster of speakers is any clue to the value of this program, all attendees will have their batteries recharged for a superior type of library service. The list of participants includes: a college president, two chiefs from the California Department of Education, a professor of humanities from the University of Southern California, and a visiting professor of education from the University of Indiana.

The conference theme is "Extending the School Library Program." Librarians leading workshops at local schools Saturday afternoon February 11 will be: Mrs. Mildred Frary, Assistant Supervisor, Library Section, L. A. City Schools—elementary school group; Miss Helen Houston, librarian at Burbank Junior High School—junior high group; Mrs. Avonelle Tierney, librarian at Eisenhower High School, Rialto—senior high; Mr. William Grainger of Pasadena City College—junior college group; Mr. Walter Harris, Consultant, Contra Costa County Schools — county librarians; Mrs. Dulcie Blume, Coordinator, Alameda County Schools—curriculum librarians; and Mrs. Fern Davis, Director, Pittsburg Unified School District—supervisors and directors. Coordinator of these group meetings is Mrs. Ellanora Kramer, SLAC state president in 1958-1959.

Our conference theme, "Extending the School Library Program," makes this meeting of particular interest to administrators and resource people generally as well as to school librarians. A large attendance is anticipated.

Thelma V. Taylor is Head Librarian at L. A. Harbor Junior College, Wilmington.

LINDSAY AND HEFFERNAN TO SPEAK SATURDAY MORNING

The First General Session Saturday morning will hear an address on "Trends in Secondary Education and the School Library" by Dr. Frank Lindsay, Chief of the Bureau of Secondary Education, California Department of Education. Graduating from Indiana University, a Phi Beta Kappa, Dr. Frank Lindsay went on to secure his Master's from Claremont and additional graduate units at Purdue, Minnesota, and Stanford. His teaching experience was gained in high schools, junior college and universities. Author of numerous educational articles, Dr. Lindsay has been Chief of the Secondary Bureau since 1943.

"Trends in Elementary Education and the School Library" will be discussed at the Saturday luncheon by Miss Helen Heffernan, Chief, Bureau of Elementary Education, California Department of Education. With degrees from Nevada, Berkeley, and Stanford, Miss Heffernan has had varied and rich experiences beyond teaching and serving as Chief of the Bureau of Elementary Education. From 1946-1948 she was Elementary Schools Officer on the Headquarters Staff of the Supreme Command Allied Powers in Tokyo. Author of six books, publisher of the California Journal of Elementary Education since 1931, speaker at professional meetings nationwide, and world traveller, she brings to our membership a superior and inspiring background.

BANQUET SPEAKER

Dr. René Bellé

A reception on the Starlight Roof follows the Saturday afternoon workshops. The banquet that evening will be highlighted by music from the Long Beach City Schools and an address—"Homage to Albert Camus"—by Dr. René Bellé, Professor of Humanities, University of Southern California. Dr. Bellé received his early education in Normandie, France, and attended Ocean High School, the buildings of which were constructed by William the Conqueror, and a high school in Rouen, the town in which Joan of Arc was born. He won his Licence en Lettres and Docteur en Sciences from the University of Paris. He has received many honors, has taught at USC since 1926, loves teaching, is married and lives in Santa Monica, and is said to sparkle like vintage champagne.

Sunday morning includes a business meeting and time to attend the church of your choice. Dr. Ruth Strickland, Professor of Education, Indiana University, will be the luncheon Speaker. A Ph.D. from Columbia, she has had elementary, college and university experience and has authored three books in the teaching of language.

The afternoon allows time for tours to nearby places of interest, such as Disneyland, Knott's Berry Farm, and Marineland; or a boat trip around the harbor may be arranged. Committee meetings and films are scheduled for the evening.

Dr. René Bellé

"REALMS OF GOLD" THEME OF CLOSING ADDRESS

Dr. Frederick Hard, President and Professor of English, Scripps College, will address the final session, Monday morning, on "Travellers in the Realms of Gold." Some will call this the "piece de resistance." Dr. Hard has long enjoyed an enviable reputation as a speaker in the Southland. A native of the South who earned his Doctorate at Johns Hopkins, he taught at North Carolina, Tulane, and his Alma Mater. He became president of Scripps College in 1944 and has contributed much to the advancement of civic as well as literary and modern language groups. His address will provide a stimulating conclusion to the 1961 convention of the School Library Association of California.

THE CURRICULUM LIBRARY

by Chase Dane

One of the most interesting recent developments in school librarianship is the curriculum library. Before long most school districts will have such a library. Because this development is so new no uniform pattern has been developed yet. Sometimes the curriculum library is a part of the district's professional library, sometimes it is a part of the curriculum laboratory, and sometimes it is a separate unit.

It seems to have started in teacher training institutions. Students preparing to become teachers were required to develop a unit as part of their practice teaching, or as part of their class work in a course in curriculum development. To help them, college and university education libraries began building up collections of curriculum guides and units of study. In time these collections became so large that it was necessary to organize them, so that students could more easily find what they wanted.

But this is only part of the story. The development of curriculum libraries raises the age-old question: Which came first, the chicken or the egg? For almost simultaneously school districts began developing, and publishing, their own curriculum guides. This speeded up the growth of these collections, since it made more materials available to add to them. The growing availability of good, well-organized, and handsomely printed or mimeographed curriculum guides has undoubtedly led to the development of many curriculum libraries.

The growth of curriculum libraries has presented the school or district librarian with a number of problems. One, of course, is space. A building designed to house an education library or a professional library seldom has any extra room for a curriculum library. Next has been the problem of how to organize this wealth of new material. Much of the material in a curriculum library is ephemeral, and librarians have elected to treat it as pamphlet material rather than as a conventional book collection, even when books form a large and important part of the collection.

Gradually a pattern for arranging the material in a curriculum library is emerging. The one most widely used at the present time divides the material according to grade level first—that is, elementary, secondary, and higher education. Often state adopted or district adopted textbooks are placed at the beginning of each of these three sections. The books in this part of the collection are usually arranged alphabetically by subject, such as arithmetic, language arts, and science.

From here on there are several satisfactory ways of arranging the material in a curriculum library. One plan is to arrange it again alphabetically by subject. Often curriculum guides and units of study are placed after the state texts, in pamphlet boxes. Then come the sample textbooks, arranged alphabetically by publisher within each subject area. This arrangement makes it easy for the teacher who wants to see what textbooks have been published on elementary school language arts, for example.

A word of caution is in order here. The curriculum librarian's first impulse may be to subdivide these materials too finely. That is, he may feel that it will be more helpful to divide secondary school science into biology, chemistry, and physics. Or that language arts should be broken down into composition, drama, and grammar. After working with a collection divided this way, however, he will usually conclude that it is better to lump all science textbooks or all language arts books together. Few curriculum library collections will be large enough to require any further subdivision.

The cataloging of all this material should be kept to a minimum, for several reasons. The library supervisor or district librarian who finds himself in charge of a curriculum library very soon discovers that this is just one more job for which he is responsible, without any additional staff or clerical help. The cataloging should also be kept simple, because new material comes into the collection and old material leaves it so rapidly. Except when the curriculum library is part of the education library of a university or college, there is neither space nor need to keep materials permanently.

One simple way to handle the cataloging is to type just one card for each item. The entry is by publisher, and this brings all the guides by one school district or all the textbooks by one publisher together in the catalog. Thus a teacher or a publisher's representative who wants to know what San Diego guides or what Macmillan textbooks are in the collection can easily find this information.

The shelf arrangement of the materials will supply the information given by the subject headings in a conventional card catalog. This leaves one piece of information uncovered anywhere, either in the catalog or on the shelves—the authors of the books. However, the authors of textbooks are ordinarily not too important to the patrons of a curriculum library. Teachers are more interested in subject areas and grade levels than they are in authors. Of course, an author card can be made for the catalog, if the librarian has the time. But this is a luxury which many librarians cannot afford.

The value of a curriculum library depends on its scope and up-to-date-ness, and this presents the librarian with still another problem. Contacts must be maintained with publishers' representatives, so that new textbooks are added to the collection as soon as they are published. Letters must be written to school districts requesting guides which teachers have seen or heard about which they believe are worth adding to the collection. All of this takes time and money, and yet if this work is not done the value and usefulness of the collection will be seriously limited.

The value, as well as the number, of curriculum libraries will undoubtedly increase within the next few years. SLAC now has a section composed of curriculum librarians. And recently the State Department of Education began issuing a bulletin designed especially for them, including a much needed listing of new materials, especially new curriculum guides prepared by school districts. The State is also making a survey of curriculum library policies.

A READING-LANGUAGE PROJECT IN THE SIXTH GRADE

by Rick Blackley

Probably the most rewarding activity undertaken by my class of sixth graders last year was a reading-language project involving use of the library.

In a discussion during a regular reading period it became evident that all of my sixth-graders were interested in the people who write books. Many admitted that they had wondered about the lives of authors but had never done anything to satisfy their curiosity. We decided to do something about this. The first step was to compile a list of thirty-two favorite authors. Each pupil then agreed to be responsible for learning the name and location of the publishing house handling the work of one author on the list.

A consultation with our librarian led to the discovery that right in our school library on the reference shelf was a book listing all the major publishing houses. One book never became so busy in such short time as did that book. Each person looked up the correct mailing address of the publishing house handling the work of his author.

It seems no exaggeration to say that the language lesson on how to write a business letter to a very large and very busy publishing house had probably never before been so well received or so enthusiastically entered into by a group of sixth graders. A discussion of form and proper terminology was the preface to several periods of painstaking effort in the completion of each letter. In substance each publisher was asked to provide biographical information about a particular author, including a picture, if possible, with his reply. The letters were finished and popped into the mail just before spring vacation.

During the two weeks immediately following vacation the United States mails became a matter of absorbing interest, and at least thirty minutes a day were given to discussion of the operation of these mails and the time involved in said operation. Patience does not seem to be an innate virtue of eleven year olds. The highlight of each day was the time appointed for the checking of the teacher's box to see if the mail had brought some fabulous parcel. When mail came, everything stopped, and the lucky pupil who had received mail that day became the center of attraction and the envy of all who had not yet received answers to their letters.

For me to describe the feelings and reactions of a young person opening his very first and very own business letter is impossible. Let me just say that I wish every author of every letter could have shared with me the feeling and the experience. "Rewarding" is the best word I can offer, but it is very inadequate.

Almost every letter was answered and the information requested given. The letters were warm, personal, and sincere. Most of the publishers sent book jackets of new or not yet released books by the authors in question. Some forwarded pupil's letters to the authors, and this led to new and wonderful letters from author to pupil, with autographed pictures not infrequently enclosed. One author, to whom a boy with a flair for science had written, sent not only an autographed picture but reprints from an article in National Geographic and a personal note commending the boy for his interest in science and urging him to continue his studies in this field.

It soon became apparent that we had ample material for a display, and interest created by our display of book jackets during open-house week kept both librarian and teacher busy for several weeks making sure that those new books got to the right people before they were put into circulation.

The spirit of the entire project was reflected in the unwillingness of every single person to part with the results of his letter. But one boy summed up interest and enthusiasm in the project even before any letters went into the mail when he came to my desk for help in checking his letter for mistakes and said, "It has to be perfect 'cause I've never written a letter to New York before, and I want to be sure it gets there."

FOR THE ASKING

Available upon request plus 30c to cover postage: "Wilderness Ways; a Bibliography for Young People," prepared by Grace Seward, librarian at Anaheim High School, 123 N. Citron, Anaheim, California.

Miss Seward has divided her material into four parts: books reflecting the mystery and interrelatedness of all life, adventures of naturalists, observations of animal life, and biographies of naturalists and conservationists. Each section is introduced by one or more startlingly beautiful quotations. An annotated bibliography worthy in spirit of its theme. Supplied in heavy paper cover.

AROUND THE STATE

USC OFFERS INSTITUTES

Again this year the School of Library Science at the University of Southern California offers a series of institutes for librarians, three of which are scheduled for February and March of this year. Of particular interest to school librarians is the two day program for March 10-11, 1961, on "Building Book Collections."

For further details on this and on the two February institutes—Feb. 16-17, and Feb. 23-24—write to Dr. Martha Boaz, Dean, School of Library Science, USC, Los Angeles 7.

SLACSS MEETING DECEMBER THIRD IN BEVERLY HILLS

Southern Section's annual Christmas meeting was held at the Beverly Hilton Hotel in Beverly Hills, on December third, 1960. Morning group meetings were followed by a beautifully appointed luncheon enhanced by table centerpieces for which Mrs. Felicia Smith, Social Chairman, was responsible. Music through the courtesy of Sigma Alpha Iota, honorary music fraternity, of Occidental College, under the direction of Mrs. Llewellyn Roberts, added much to the occasion, and concluded with Christmas songs sung by the audience.

Mrs. Gladys Bowen, Program Chairman, introduced the speaker of the day, James Warner Bellah, veteran of both world wars, novelist, short story writer, and film writer. Speaking on "Books and Youth", Mr. Bellah developed his topic through discussion of the effect of American culture on children, the importance of allaying fear in the child, the influence of "canned entertainment," the need for wide reading, especially books of American history and biography, and for training in exact methods of research.

STATE LIBRARIAN MARRIES

Of unusual interest to librarians was the marriage on October second, 1960, of Mrs. Carma Zimmerman, California State Librarian, to Dr. Robert Leigh. The distinguished Dean of Columbia University's School of Library Service and director of monumental studies of public and state libraries, Dr. Leigh is now retired from Columbia but active as visiting lecturer at various universities and colleges. Following a honeymoon in Hawaii, the Leighs are making their home in Sacramento.

INSTITUTE AT SAN JOSE

Speaking before an audience of 250 librarians at San Jose State College on December second, 1960, Melvin Without described in detail the experimental program being carried on by the California State Library through which centralized ordering, cataloging, and processing of books are made possible for sixteen member libraries. His talk was followed by a panel discussion in which the operation of the program was described by the librarians of a county district, a city school district, a union elementary district, a metropolitan district in which the high schools employ a central cataloging system, and a highly specialized U.S. Naval postgraduate school.

During the afternoon advanced techniques and machines used in minimizing routine work were explained or demonstrated. Representatives of various commercial cataloging services were present to answer questions. Leslie Janke, head of San Jose's Department of Librarianship, presided.

Professor LeRoy Merritt, Acting Dean of the UC School of Librarianship, announced that a similar institute is planned for January at Berkeley.
